meant by the word statesman in this is required, it cannot be denied that the verbial talkers, and they always want formly against the bank, subjecting the connection, but understand it to be one narrow-gauge has advantages in all muslin', p familiar with the principles and policy local business, on account of cheap con-

discussed almost every conceivable topic impression. St. Louis and Memphis are relating thereto. There is no man in all to be the centers of railroad systems, to the country who has one-half of his the perfection of which broad and narvaried information, or who has had row-gauge roads will alike contribute: occasion so often to apply it practically to the questions of the day. For the past twenty year the "great" statesmen of the party to which he belonged have, in most par ticulars, simply stolen ideas that govern them from his articles in the Tribune. elaborated them in "great speeches," with ten times more words, and mad for themselves immense reputations. The people have perceived this; they have noticed who were the originators of the measures and policy of these so called eminent Congressmen and mode statesmen. It is true, Mr. Greeley has, with the triffing exception of a thr months' service in Congress and a brief experience in the New York Constitubodies. But that is not material. The best school to form statesmanship is not in Congress, but in an editorial sanctum. It is there that quickness of perception readiness of thought and application, great knowledge and resources must be displayed in order to win success. I must be done in the face of hostile criticism, political and personal; and a degree of intelligence is required that emnently fits those who do it well for the highest political positions. There may be a vulgar error derived from some old aristocratic notions against those whose destiny it is, mentally as well as physically, to toil for a livelihood; that there is something i the pursuit which is derogatory to a statesman's antecedents; but it is excoolingly false and unworthy of Americaus, as we have shown. The best statesmen in France for forty years were Guizot and Thiers, both editors of prom nent journals. In fact, in Europe to day in England, France, Germany Raly and Spain-the leading statesmen have been chosen from the ranks of the journalists. If two or three ably-writ ten and well-conceived speeches are sufficient to make the reputation, as statesmen, of Congressional leaders, how much greater should be the reputation of those who have made speeches daily for thirty years -written, of course, but
